ABSTRACT

The resource guide contains a listing of 1,004 notable American Indian/Alaska Native women who are willing to share their resource skills in 62 Indian-specific programs, Indian priority issues, and women's agenda issues. The women represent 321 tribes and bands and are from 44 states. Biographical briefs for each woman include personal data (name, address and telephone number as of winter 1982); tribal affiliation; place of birth and year; professional field; narrative pertaining to Indian activity/contributions; efforts in advocacy of women; and summary of publications, honors/awards, and highest degree received. An index lists the women in six categories: skills and expertise in Indian tribes, communities, and programs (leadership roles, cultural preservation, spokesperson/visibility role, education, health care delivery, development/self sufficiency expertise, employment advocacy skills, and delivery of social services); skills and expertise in advocacy of women (education, health, social service delivery, and employment opportunity); professional specialties (arts, business, communications/media, education, health care, legal, science, and social work); post-graduate educational attainment; tribe; and state. OHOYO ONE THOUSAND:

A RESOURCE GUIDE OF AMERICAN INDIAN/ALASKA NATIVE WOMEN

By Owanah Anderson

Women's Educational Equity Act

To My Sisters

Strong women, who instinctively know to find answers for today
we but look to yesterday.

PHOTOGRAPHS: Developers of this work were unable to locate a "morgue" of photographs of contemporary American Indian women. Photos published in this work, with few exceptions, were action shots from Ohoyo Resource Center's three regional conferences. Delores Twohatchet (Kiowa/Comanche) and Nancy Butterfield (Chippewa) are primarily credited for shots of 1981 Oklahoma Conference and Sandra Osawa (Makah) is credited for photographs of 1982 Northwest Conference.

COVER CREDITS: The cover design incorporates contributions from Dakota artist Gabrielle Wynde Tateyuskanskan and Bacone College linguist Charles Van Tuyl, Cherokee. The artist in designing the Ohoyo logo captures symbolic meaning through use of the tipi representing the home, the ear of corn representing substenance, herbs representing healing and the pipe as a symbol of spiritual growth. The four symbols encircle three figures personifying unification of generations: elder, adult and youth. Dr. Van Tuyl, who helped develop a typewriter element utilizing the Cherokee alphabet, translated the word "woman" into several tribal languages.

Many individuals from wide and varied Indian communities — from the Penobscot Nation of Maine to the Seminoles of Florida, from the distant Native villages of Alaska to the Pueblo groups of the sunbaked Southwest — assisted in development of this volume.

To cite names of several would slight many.

The core of initial assistance came from many of the 58 American Indian-Alaska Native women who caucused at the 1977 IWY National Women's Conference in Houston, Tex. Joining in the effort were Indian women in academia, tribal leadership women, urban Indian program administrators, grassroot educators and many more.

In addition to Ohoyo (the word translates from the Choctaw language as "woman") advisers, consultants and panel members who are herein named, special appreciation is extended to 48 regional resource persons who contributed extensive effort to elicit cooperation in the venture.

Gratitude is expressed to each member of the Ohoyo staff for singular dedication and commitment. Fran Walton coordinated 1981 outreach on a massive scale and carried the load well into the writing stage, and beyond. Sedelta Verble (Cherokee/Apache) was a joint writer for the 1980 edition and helped with the 1982 edition. Credits are extended to Noalene Clanton, whose skills in typing and proofing are incomparable . . . to young CETA trainees, Kim Rankins Price (Pawnee) and Gloria Onco (Kiowa/Comanche) . . . to Dorothy Crowder, a data processor who had to learn a new language style to accommodate indexing Indian names such as Crow Flies High.

Perhaps most of all, appreciation is extended to the entrants themselves who painstakingly filled out complex computer forms (to permit extensive cross-indexing). It should be noted that virtually to a person, each entrant submitted her registration form in the spirit of sharing and in a sense of willingness to be of future assistance to other women, other Indian women and other Indian communities - and not in a sense of self-aggrandizement.

Our sincere appreciation is also extended to Dr. Leslie Wolfe, Director of Women's Educational Equity Act Program, who had vision to recognize the need for such a volume - and of the need for six other components of Ohoyo Resource Center - in context with federal legislation designed to advance educational opportunities for all this nation's women.

introduction

By no means does this volume contain a complete listing of all notable Native American achievers.

The volume is intended, in fact, to offer a sampling of resource skills possessed by a small percentage of our growing* but basically invisible population.

It is offered to Indian communities across the country to assist in locating individuals whose backgrounds may be of help on the hard road to self-sufficiency; and, it is offered as well to the dominant culture to refute the threadbare alibi still too often heard: ". . . but we don't KNOW any qualified Indian women . . ."

Impetus to develop this work was activated at a 1978 Washington, D.C. reception when an energetic young staffperson from Department of Housing and Urban Development approached me with an urgent and immediate request for names of a dozen or so American Indian women for consideration by HUD Secretary Patricia Harris for a high level appointment to the Indian Housing program. I was unable instantly to produce a comprehensive listing of our women with Indian Housing expertise, nor were any of my colleagues scattered around Indian Country. Such a list did not, in fact, exist. This volume, however, identifies 97 of our women with expertise in Indian Housing.

This Resource Guide identifies 1,004 (two of whom have deceased recently: Emily Ivanoff Brown of Alaska and Ramona Tse-Pe Coriz of New Mexico) with skills in 62 Indian-specific programs and Indian priority issues. The book lists individuals with expertise in 28 women's agenda issues: domestic violence, adolescent pregnancy programs, educational equity, affirmative action, child care, etc.

Contained are women from 44 states and the District of Columbia - only West Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, Indiana and Pennsylvania are missing. These 1,000-plus women identify with 231 tribes and bands.

Listed are doctors, lawyers and Indian chiefs! Included are 65 women with academic doctorates and another 72 in doctoral study. Listed are 16 of the estimated 49 women medical doctors within the population, and 29 of the estimated 60 Indian women lawyers.

And, speaking of women chiefs: in 1981 Ohoyo Resource Center conducted extensive research among 500 Federally-recognized tribes and Alaska Native village-corporations, and uncovered the fact that 69 women were heading their tribal governments - chiefs! Promptly following publication of the research a woman from academia of the dominant culture telephoned to inquire when the first woman had been elected to head her tribal government. Ensuing conversation revealed that the woman had drawn the hasty conclusion that Indian women's elevation to leadership roles was a recent phenomenon arising in tandem with the women's movement. She appeared enormously surprised that women of many of our tribes have been accorded leadership roles from the pre-Columbus era through the present day.

OHOYO ONE THOUSAND identifies women in eight broad professional fields: arts, business, communication, education, health care, legal, science and social work. While the volume identifies women who have attained post-graduate degrees, the work also cites individuals who have made contributions significant to values of the culture: traditional arts, traditional medicine, ceremonials and dance, and women who are spokespersons on Indian-priority issues such as sovereignty, legal rights and resource development.

Age span of individuals listed in this Guide ranges from 23 to 100-plus. The eldest is Mary Ground Number One, oldest living member of the Blackfeet Tribe who was born approximately 1880, and who authored Grass Women Stories and assisted with several other manuscripts on heritage and culture of the tribe. Among other elders included is Jennie Shakshaaneekeek Thlunaut (Tlingit), one of the last surviving Chilkat blanket weavers and who served as a Presbyterian missionary, began work in 1918 with Home League of Salvation Army and in 1929 on Alaska Native Land Claims and has been active with Alaska Native Sisterhood for 59 years. The youngest listed is Karen Kay (Ojibwa), age 23, who is fiscal officer for Michigan Indian Manpower, Inc.

* 1980 Census enumerated 1,418,195 American Indians/Alaska Natives, a 71 percent increase over the past decade.

Three generations of Makah women from Washington state are included: Pearl Warren, the grandmother, who has served on National Indian Council for Aging and who has long worked to achieve equal employment and equal pay for women; Mary Jo Butterfield, her daughter, a former tribal councilwoman who has provided exemplary services to national Indian organizations including Americans for Indian Opportunity; and Donna D. Parker, Mrs. Warren's 31-year-old granddaughter, with work experience with the Makah tribe as Grants and Contracts Developer.

An overwhelming majority of entrants were presently working in Indian programs. On the surface, it would appear that more professionally-educated women are returning to "pay their dues" to Indian communities than are men. Association of American Indian Physicians reports that many of the male doctors are "lost" once the MD degree is obtained. Fourteen of the 16 women physicians, however, were practicing in Indian communities as were a significant number of women attorneys, educators and social workers.

OHOYO ONE THOUSAND and its 1980 predecessor, which contained entries of 631 achievers, were developed through extensive cooperation and involvement of a broad-based national consortium of Indian women. Contacts were made to tribal governments; national Indian organizations and coalitions; Indian media; state commissions on Indian affairs; urban Indian centers; education, health and social agencies and to countless individuals throughout Indian Country. Developmental procedure included basic questions: What have you done for Indians . . . what have you done in advocacy for women . . . are you willing to share your skills with others. A 10-member geographically and tribally balanced panel of consultants reviewed each registrant. First consideration weighed in selecting individuals for entry in the Guide was level of contributions to Indian people (for instance, tribal councilmembers were automatically listed), followed by eight other considerations including notability as role model, depth of experience, affiliations with national boards, educational level, job experience, volunteerism relating to Indian programs, extent of commitment to women's issues and unique employment (vis-á-vis, non-traditional employment for women). Definition of an Indian complied, necessarily, with currently used definition of U.S. Department of Education, the project's funding source. Questionable definition compliances were checked out principally in home communities and in several cases with tribal agencies.

Each individual herein listed has somewhere "paid her dues" to Indian people. Each entrant has evidenced commitment to Indian people through her work as either a professional or volunteer.

Developers of the Guide dealt with a cultural obstacle, for there exists an ongoing reticence to "put one's self forward", especially among the more traditional tribal women. This reticence precluded response from a number of individuals whose skills and background would have provided added substance to the volume. Developers found it quite revealing that the same individual who chose not to be considered for entry in the publication readily recommended other achievers of her acquaintance.

The developers hope that the reader will - perhaps between the lines - grasp the scope of the strength of the American Indian-Alaska Native women. Each woman's achievement has been against odds, for the Native American woman continues to remain at the lowest rung of all socio-economic ladders: lowest annual income, greatest unemployment rate, poorest health, poorest housed, shortest life-span, lowest educational attainment of all the nation's ethnic women. She too often remains locked in the squaw image stereotype, victimized by textbook neglect and bias, only dimly invisioned on the national consciousness. Few non-Indians can recall names of Indian women who ever lived on this continent - beyond Pocahontas, the princess, or Sacajawea, the Lewis and Clark guide.

Through the strength of our women, the race has survived incredible obstacles, and the respect of Indian people for its women can best be summarized in this old Cheyenne saying:

> A nation is not conquered
> until the hearts of its women > are upon the ground.
> Then, it is done; no matter > how brave its warriors, > nor how strong its weapons.

THE HUMOR OF INDIAN WOMEN IS A WONDERFUL THING - The Cherokee writer Rayna Green has called the humor of the "round and brown" a magnificent characteristic. At Ohoyo conferences, laughter generally comes at expense of Ada Deer who is shown below receiving a plastic tomahawk memorializing her having "mugged a mugger" on a Washington, D.C. street. With Ada (left) are Dr. Leslie Wolfe, WEEA program director, and Dr. Green. At the NW Conference, Ada was presented a "homemade" fishing tackle by Dr. Lee Piper.

LONG RECOGNIZED ADVOCATE - LaDonna V. Harris (Comanche) of Washington, D.C. has long been recognized nationally and internationally as a spokesperson on American Indian issues and as an advocate for Indian opportunity. Founder/Director of Americans for Indian Opportunity (AIO), Harris is perhaps the best known contemporary Indian woman.

"NEW WAVE NATIVES" - Speaking on Indian and personal self-sufficiency at Ohoyo's NW Conference in 1982 was a distinguished trio who shared a wealth of information. Pictures form left: Glenda Ahhaitty (Cherokee) of California; Joann Morris (Chippewa) currently of Washington, D.C. and Rose Robinson (Hopi) who also works in the nation's capital and heads American Indian programs for Phelps Stokes Fund.

CHOCTAW WOMAN SEEKS CHIEF'S SLOT - Harriet James announced her candidacy for the post of Principal Chief of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, a position never previously held by a woman. The retired educator was the first woman ever elected to the Choctaw Tribal Council.

INDIAN WOMEN SEEK PUBLIC OFFICE - 1982 saw two Indian women seeking public office. At left, Jeanne Givens (Coeur d'Alene) won the democratic party nomination for a seat in Idaho state legislature and Ada Deer (Menominee), the only Indian in America seeking statewide public office, placed second in a field of four for the democratic party's nominee for Secretary of State of Wisconsin. Deer received endorsement of her tribe, intertribal organizations and the leading newspapers of the state.

A woman's place is in the House
...and the Senate

CONFERENCE SPEAKERS - Ohoyo has provided a podium for 50 Indian women speakers from 22 states and District of Columbia in its first three regional conferences in New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Pacific Northwest.

Pictured at top, from left, in an education workshop are panelists Gyda Guenther (Salish) and Carol Juneau (Mandan-Hidatsa), both of Montana; Joyce Reyes (Yakima) and Marilyn Bentz (Gros Ventre), both of Seattle. Speaking on the panel also were Ramona Sandoval (Sac & Fox/Winnebago), now of Arizona, and Lucille Echo Hawk (Pawnee) of Colorado.

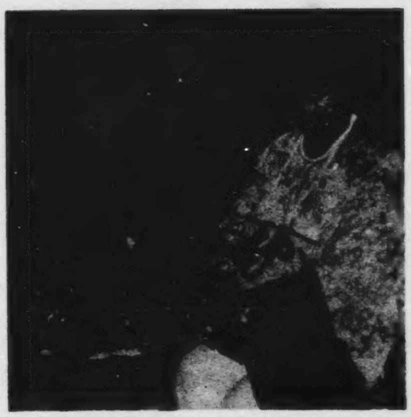
Wisconsin NAIWA Meeting



POW WOW DRESS - Bette Mele (Seneca) of New Jersey visits with Naomi Shepherd (Nez Perce) of Washington at Wisconsin meeting of North American Indian Women's Association in 1981.

REGISTRATION - Georgianna Ignace (Menominee) of Wisconsin meets an Oklahoman with a similar name, Georgiann Robinson (Osage).

ORGANIZERS - Dorothy Davids (Stockbridge-Munsee), coordinator for the NAIWA Wisconsin conference, is seated with Mary Natani (Winnebago), outgoing president of the national Indian women's organization. Natani was succeeded by Carmaleta Monteith (Eastern Cherokee) of Georgia.

BOAT RIDE - Three Oklahomans at the Wisconsin meeting enjoyed a boat ride through Wisconsin Dells. They are Georgianna Robinson (Osage), Dr. Margaret Nelson (Cherokee), and Ruby Ludwig (Cherokee).

MULTIPLE ACTIVITY - Ramona Bennett (Puyallup) shared with 300 Indian women who attended Ohoyo's NW Conference her colorful and trying experiences as a fishing rights activist and as chairperson of her tribe for eight years. Between workshops, Bennett (left) produced conference souvenir t-shirts which are being inspected by Roberta Ferron (Rosebud Sioux), attorney and educator from Montana. Ferron delivered a stirring "up-beat" conference closing address.
